EDITORIAL

This editorial is written shortly before the end of the year 2021 and thus much later than originally planned, as if the year had run by without leaving any deeper traces. In view of the many cancelled scientific events, one might actually get the idea that this is a year that has been erased from the calendar or the collective memory. But of course it is not, and anyone taking stock of this year will recall an astonishing number of adaptations to the new reality of the pandemic that we have made individually and collectively. The International Historical Committee has had to postpone its Congress again, scheduled for August 2021, but unlike in 2020, it has not simply decided on another delay, but has held a General Assembly to take important decisions that will determine its future.

This General Assembly has decided on changes in the office of President and General Secretary, thanked the previous incumbents and noted with approval the plans of the new ones. It has held the necessary elections for new members of the Board, reflecting the usual changes in the historiographical orientations represented there. It has determined the location of the next Congress, to be held on the 100th anniversary of the founding of the CISH in 2026. And it has opened up the programme of the Poznan Congress to new, complementary proposals, thereby reflecting that historiography has naturally evolved, chosen new foci and tried out new procedures since the selection of major and minor themes for main sessions, roundtables and panels at the General Assembly in Moscow in 2017.

This newsletter presents the results of this General Assembly, which took place in two sessions and was conducted by treasurer Sacha Zala with the usual precision of Swiss organisation. At the same time, we look ahead to the meeting in Poznań, which is sure to be a moment of enthusiastic reunion that we all look forward to with anticipation. A look back at the Warsaw Congress held in 1933, which a carefully prepared edition of materials by the present Polish organising committee allows, perhaps helps us to place the current difficulties in historical perspective and thus also to put them into perspective a little. As historians, we look back in the current pandemic not only at the history of global health, but also at how we have dealt with other dynamics that have challenged the usual course of events. Now that history is less and less used for heroisation (even if it still happens from time to time), it sometimes serves as a consolation because historians become spoilsports in the face of a discourse of newness. However, we should not let this spoil our joy for a new year, which will certainly also hold unexpectedly pleasant things in store. In this spirit, I wish you a successful 2022 on behalf of the entire Board of the CISH and, as always, I look forward to your feedback and suggestions with which this newsletter can be enriched.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY 2021

Matthias Middell, Board Member

10. Voting Procedures for the General Assembly of 11 May 2021

Sacha Zala, Treasurer

11. Various questions

For the second session of the General Assembly, 51 delegates of member organisations (national committees and affiliated commissions) with the right to vote were registered.

President Andrea Giardina opened the meeting by recalling the words of Thucydides about the plague in Athens with its amount of human suffering but also calling historians to reflect about such events by questioning the meaning of his/her task, which is, first of all, to be useful to mankind. At the same time the president warned against the danger of an excessive and truncated updating of the past in order to pursue current political goals.

Andrea Giardina

Since there were no further comments on the report presented by the General Secretary, the GA went immediately to vote and accepted the report unanimously. The two auditors, Frank Hadler and Markus Furrer, presented their report regarding the financial report stating that they have found the accounts correct based on the documents provided by the treasurer for the years 2018–2020. They propose that the General Assembly should approve the financial report which happened directly afterwards with 51 votes (100 percent) confirming the report by treasurer Sacha Zala.

The treasurer then presented a proposal concerning the use of a logo as “member” to signal that a member organisation that has paid the full membership fees supports the solidarity fund. Otherwise it is entitled to use the logo of a “supporter” of the solidarity fund. The Assembly adopts the new regulation starting in 2022 with 49 votes (96 percent) in favor (49) and two abstentions.

Under the following item the Assembly approved

- the application of the National Committee of Serbia for membership with 48 votes in favor (84 percent) and three abstentions; and
- the application of the Commission for the History of the Pacific Ocean as an Affiliated Commission with 50 votes (98 percent) in favor and one abstention.

Afterwards, the Assembly turned towards the election of a new president and a new general secretary and asked the candidates where they see CISH in ten years and which possibilities they see for a professionalization of the organization?

Catherine Horel, the candidate for presidency answered the questions by stating: “In ten years we will have accomplished a centenary of ICHS activities and our goal is to look into more years as an organization enabling historians worldwide to meet and communicate. But we have to enlarge the community because we are still lacking a presence in Africa and this is our already known weakness. Therefore, we must certainly do more between the congresses to attract interest and new membership. The recent change in the modalities of fees is a significant progress. We hope to encourage younger participants (in the congresses but also for the Board) through the extent of the Solidarity Fund and the innovation of the Research Forum.” When it comes to professionalization, she insisted that “this is indeed a task to be dealt with because we can no longer do it as a “one man-job”; the problem is that our activity is irregular so that we cannot employ fulltime personal but rely on benevolence and availability of our colleagues on resources from their own institutions.”

Edoardo Tortarolo, the candidate for the position of the general secretary, for his part underlined:

“The secretary-general has to carry on the activity of CISH with a sense of continuity with the intellectual tradition that supports the prestige of CISH. We must also be aware that times are changing at a dramatic pace. Respect for historiographical diversity has been a defining feature of CISH, its raison-d'être since 1926 and the organization has to be a global community of historians in the years to come. Today there are new and challenging developments for historians that CISH should address and tackle, last but not least, the enduring consequences of the pandemic that will likely exacerbate inequalities and resentment. My answer to the question where I see CISH in ten years is very straightforward: In 2031, CISH should have strengthened its role as a platform for innovation and dialogue worldwide and actively defend the values of freedom of investigation and respectful communication between historians. It will achieve this goal by organizing comprehensive congress every 5 years, to be sure, which still is and will be an excellent opportunity for face-to-face interaction and for allowing young historians from all over the world to participate. But I also expect CISH to make intensive use of the new digital technologies that have impacted the daily practice of historians and have changed crucial categories of historical understanding. We can't ignore that a strong process of decentralization of historical narratives has taken place. I see the task of CISH as a coherent and sustained effort to coordinate existing trends, strengthen its network in a variety of ways, start a dialogue between historians who would not have communicated without CISH.

CISH has to become more and more a supporting framework for all those national associations and committees and individual historians who are willing to engage in authentic and unbiased international cooperation in teaching and dissemination and in research. To achieve these goals and make cooperation more efficient, the question about further professionalization has to be answered. The organizational structure of CISH should indeed be reinforced, if the financial situation is compatible with that. A person with professional skills in communication and fund-raising should work in close cooperation with the General Assembly and the Board. A permanent link between the Board and the member organisations should be available and facilitate the dissemination of information. As a consequence of this professionalization of the organization, CISH would be able also to help coordinate trans-national cooperation projects and create added-value for all national committees, associations and commissions in CISH."

Similar to the interview of the future president and general secretary, the new candidates for board membership were asked how they are intended to make CISH better known to professional historians and which possibilities they see for further professionalization of the organization?

Gunlög Fur insisted in her answer to these questions on the fact that there should be more engagement between congresses while it would be also "crucial to raise our voices against any misuse of history and support colleagues and institutions being attacked in their integrity as historians. The organization "Historians without borders" could be a partner in this endeavor." Since history has a clear social function there should be more of a focus on educational matters. The recent and still ongoing pandemic is in her opinion certainly a topic to be addressed for example by encouraging research on pandemics in history. Finally, she underlined "we really have to attract younger scholars."

Nuno Gonçalo Monteiro expected to know more very soon on the functioning of ICHS. Regional and thematic meetings/congresses would certainly be a way to make ICHS more visible and attract new membership. The activity should not be restrained to the big congresses. ICHS should promote debate on what is history today.

Katalin Szende on her part answered the questions raised by the assembly in insisting on the fact that "in the recent years there have been in many countries attacks against the liberty of teaching and researching history. It has to be our goal and duty to speak against manipulations of history taking place under some regimes and to help historians and institutions to make their concerns known to the community.

Katalin Szende

In this respect, ICHS should be more active and take the role of a moral authority.

Hirotaka Watanabe sees his personal task to extend the network in Asia by promoting communication between various countries and institutions, not the least by making use of the CISH-website. He recalls the invitation to hold the 2024 General Assembly in Tokyo that will be a good occasion to encourage more Asian participation in CISH-activities.

Expressing its satisfaction with the answers received from the various candidates, the General Assembly approves the candidatures of the new Board members:

Catherine Horel was elected president with 45 votes (92 percent) and four abstentions, while Krzysztof Makowski was unanimously elected Vice-President. Edoardo Tortarolo received 47 favorable votes as the new General Secretary (96 percent) and two abstentions.

The General Assembly approved the reelection of the following Board members: Eliana Dutra (acting Vice-President); Joel Harrington; Matthias Middell with 48 votes in favor and one abstention, while the new Board Members Gunlög Fur; Nuno Gonçalves Monteiro; Katalin Szende; and Hirotaka Watanabe received 47 votes in favor and two abstentions.

Under a next item, the General Assembly voted with a clear majority (46 in favor, two votes against, one abstention) for Tokyo as the place of the next general assembly meeting in 2024.

One major item of the general assembly was the decision on the XXIVth CISH Congress to be held in 2026 and in preparation for this point the delegates of Jerusalem and Leipzig were asked to give answers to a series of questions:

The first question concerned an assurance that participants from all over the world will be able to attend the conference (travel visa). Shmuel Feiner for Jerusalem assured that there will be no problem of granting visa since Israel has a very generous visa policy so that nearly everyone is able to enter the country including citizens of countries with no diplomatic representation in Israel.

Katja Castryck-Naumann for Leipzig guaranteed that there will be individual guidance for participants needing visas. There will be an aid provided by the German diplomatic service that has worldwide presence.

In a second round it was asked how the host will guarantee the security of participants? Ruth Ginio for Jerusalem stated that despite recent events there would be no concern regarding Jerusalem or Tel Aviv; international congresses are commonly held without difficulty and Israel has a great and professional practice of security matters. Katja Castryck-Naumann for Leipzig insisted in the fact that the city is absolutely safe; there is a very low crime rate and no potential danger for participants.

Concerning the Solidarity Fund of the Organizers, former Vice-President W. (Pim) den Boer made an introductory statement on the expectations of CISH for the Solidarity Fund of the Organizers (a Memo was sent to the members before the meeting); he also takes the occasion to recall his meeting with Bronisław Geremek at the Montreal Congress in 1990 where they discussed the ethics of historians which combine a demand for freedom of research and opinion as well as a quest for the truth. Each of the applicants were asked to present their concept of the Solidarity Fund of the Organizers. Shmuel Feiner for Jerusalem hinted at the ambition of the congress to enlarge the community of historians by enabling as many as possible to attend thanks to special funds being provided by governmental and private institutions. The organizers will dedicate 160.000 € for the Solidarity Fund (a memo with further details is available). Matthias Middell for Leipzig said that the financing is based on two pillars: both the German Research Foundation (Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft) and the German Academic Exchange Service have announced their support to enable speakers to travel to Leipzig and the local organisers will secure that the Solidarity Fund is available in the way described in the application documents.

A fourth question, also related to finance, addressed the current CISH's «business model» which is based primarily on members' fees. The applicants were asked to what extent they see any possibility to contribute to the CISH finances with the earnings generated by the fundraising for the Congress, hereby allowing to lower the members' fees in the future.

Shmuel Feiner for Jerusalem was optimistic about the surplus that may be generated by the Congress fees and sponsorship, therefore allowing these revenues to be handed over to ICHS.

Matthias Middell

for Leipzig said the partnership between ICHS and Congress organization has indeed to be reconsidered in order to get surpluses available to the organisation instead of the local organisers. This could be done by promoting the Research Forum in order to make it a source of benefice for ICHS. Treasurer Sacha Zala expressed at the end of the discussion his willingness to develop a new business model and present it to the Board asap.

After the extensive discussion of the various items raised the general assembly voted on the applications for the XXIVth Congress as follows:

Jerusalem: 51 % (28)

Leipzig: 47 % (26)

abstention: 2 % (1).

In conclusion, the General Assembly decided in favor of the application presented by the Historical Society of Israel, and the congress will be held in Jerusalem.

Krzysztof Makowski representing the organizing committee of the XXIIIrd CISH Congress to be held in late August 2022 in Poznań gave some information: A new call for panels has been sent out to fill some gaps in the program (Specialized Themes, Joint Sessions and Round tables). There will be as well a new call for poster sessions (also reminding the members that Shandong University is committed to award a prize for this session). A renewed call has been made also for the Research Forum and the Organizing Committee will launch an invitation for the book fair soon.

Before closing the General Assembly, the new president, Catherine Horel, thanked the members for having elected her: she is very moved about such an honor and remembers that she was first involved with ICHS at the Oslo Congress in 2000 when she became a member of the Commission for historical Slavic studies and then of the Commission for the history of international relations; she would then never have imagined reaching the summit of the organization! It is an extraordinary achievement and has also a meaning for women historians often not daring to be ambitious. But you never climb the ladder alone and therefore it was important to her to say that ICHS is a collegial enterprise. She expressed her thanks for the work done by the departing Board members during their mandate: she wants to thank Lorina Repina (Russia), recalling the very successful General Assembly in Moscow in 2017; then our colleagues from Asia, Lim Jie-Hyun (South Korea) and Tao Wenzhao (China) for their kind and professional participation; as well as vice-president Pim den Boer, always eager to scrutinize our work with benevolent criticizing. Special and warm thanks to Andrea Giardina, un signore, with whom it was such a pleasure discussing, working and last but not least, enjoying time in Rome. Catherine Horel expressed her wish to continue the efficient cooperation she had with the former president now in his new position as honorary president. Finally, she thanked honorary president Marjatta Hietala for her constant support and accompanying help during Board meetings since 2015. Andrea Giardina closed the General Assembly by thanking everyone for their participation under such difficult conditions and expressed the hope to see everyone soon in Poznań in August 2022!

WARSAW 1933 – A LOOK BACK AT THE LAST CISH-CONGRESS IN POLAND

In 1933, the representatives of the discipline met in Warsaw and Cracow from 21 to 29 August, and the organisers of the forthcoming congress in Poznań have not only kept alive the memory of this previous congress in an excellent edition, but at the same time have provided valuable material for future research by printing the congress programme in facsimile and the alphabetical list of participants with their national and in many cases also their institutional origins. Added are two contemporary accounts of the congress proceedings by Marcell Handelsman and Henri Hauser. In view of the fact that only one comprehensive article on the first Polish congress has appeared so far (by Tadeusz Kondracki in Kronika Warszawy in 1989), while numerous other texts mention the congress merely as a moment in the history of Polish historiography and its relations with neighbouring states, which they each deal with, one can already guess what discoveries are still in store for us when the CISH, as announced, bends over its own archives soon, however scattered they may be at present.

The brief history of the Warsaw Congress, which the authors of the introduction divide into a first phase from 1898 to the First World War and a second phase that began with the Brussels Congress in 1923, is also remarkable from an organisational point of view. Until the London Congress in 1913 (which could not be followed by the Congress in Russia originally planned for 1918), it was left to the hosts to take care of all the organisational details, whereas after the war, and especially at the insistence of the representatives of the American Historical Association, endowed with the funds of the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Foundation, an independent structure was created, in whose hands the Congress proceedings were now to be placed. In 1926, the CISH was founded in Geneva and immediately prepared the next congress in Oslo, which was marked by a competition of national legations, for for not a few governments it was a matter of national importance and assertion to see their history adequately represented, which is why they also became active as sponsors of the professional delegations.

As the authors note with a critical undertone: “Thus, to a lesser extent than before, the Oslo Congress was the doing of the scholars themselves” (p. 9). The often cited ecumenism of historians had not been able to develop properly in the climate of the late 1920s, in which nationalist and fascist tendencies were gaining ground, no matter how much dialogue and professional analysis were emphasised, almost implored, by individual historians. If you look at the structure of the CISH today, you can still see the great importance of national representatives of historians among the member organisations. But at the same time, the number of thematically determined commissions with their transnational membership is steadily increasing, reflecting the often desired ecumenical character of the CISH as well as the close cooperation of the national committees.

The richly illustrated volume opens with a contribution by Rafal Zebrowski on Warsaw as the capital of the newly created Polish state, which served as a stage for the Congress and used the Congress to stage itself. Krzysztof Makowski, Maciej Michalski, Tomasz Schramm and Krzysztof Zamorski follow this up with a discussion of the Congress in terms of its academic issues and its political and social resonance. From the numerous archives they have consulted, they provide many details that give an idea of the difficulties that had to be overcome in order to satisfy the curiosity of colleagues’ production and the authors’ urge to publish their contributions. If the undertaking of a volume with the Polish contributions compiled by Oskar Halecki still had the pressure of national prestige on its side and was completed on time in the required editorial and linguistic quality, the attempt to get all foreign speakers to submit their texts and corrections on time almost predictably failed. In today’s world of last-minute uploading of electronic contributions, it is perhaps impossible to imagine the headache this notorious negligence must have caused the editors of the promised congress volume. The organisers of the congress, Marcelli Handelsman and Tadeusz Manteuffel, were hit hard when it turned out that there was not enough hotel capacity at the second congress venue, Poland’s old academic centre Cracow, and when a sudden drop in the dollar exchange rate partially devalued the congress fees already paid. One understands the authors of the article, who themselves are organising such a congress under pandemic conditions, in their admiration for the skill of their predecessors. They had managed to get the Polish government to provide substantial subsidies, so that only 23 percent of the congress funding was based on the congress fees that participants had to pay, while the main part of the budget was obviously intended as an investment by the government in Poland’s reputation and – judging by the almost universally positive response – worked out that way. It stands to reason that in view of such experiences, the newly founded CISH did not attach much importance to bearing the risk of organising the congress itself, and without regret refrained from having the surplus (after all, 22,000 zloty compared to total costs of 114,492 zloty) at its disposal for future activities. Thus, a look back at the 1933 congress reveals a model that continues to be cultivated to this day, making the CISH dependent on finding financially strong organisers of its congresses (with appropriate national support in the background), but also not exposing it to any financial risk.

That the organisers were confronted with a not inconsiderable fluctuation is shown by the uncertainty about the number of participants: 1018 are listed as active participants in the congress directory, but 46 of them are marked as absent. 1240 had registered, a difference of almost 22 percent from the probable 972 present. Of the slightly less than 1000 participants, almost half (44.3 percent) were from Poland (which is considerable when compared with the 24 percent Belgians in Brussels 1923 and only 8 percent Norwegians in Oslo 1928), followed by French (10.2 percent) and Italians (8.5 percent). Only 54 came from outside Europe, 40 of them from the USA alone.

In another detailed chapter, Krzysztof Zamorski examines the question of the impact of certain panels and papers on the further development of historiography, a question that is not so easy to answer retrospectively. Iwona Dadej and Maria Solarska describe the 1933 congress as a watershed in terms of women's participation in scientific debates. As many as 306 women were listed in the list of participants, of whom only five were described as absent. For 137 of them, the authors conclude from the surnames that they were possibly accompanying male participants, but this still results in the number of 164 who had obviously travelled to Warsaw exclusively for scientific reasons. Women had fought for their place at the lecterns and the debate tables, and Polish women historians already stood out among them in terms of numbers.

The volume bridges the gap to the present with the transcript of a discussion at Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań, which took place in June 2018, when the CISH board visited the future venue of the next Polish Congress of Historians.

In her opening address to this colloquium on the future of international congresses of historians, Catherine Horel, then Secretary General and now President of CISH, referred to the difficulties of stimulating national representations of historians and attracting young historians to international congresses. She referred to the solidarity fund introduced in 2010 by the Dutch historians around Pim den Boer on the occasion of the Amsterdam Congress, which is intended to counter these difficulties. Ewa Domanska from the Poznań organising committee drew a picture of a historical science that is challenged by post-anthropocentric and postcolonial approaches and should accept these more clearly at its congresses by self-critically reflecting on the Eurocentric character of the concepts of history and science and allowing the national organisation of knowledge about the past to recede into the background. Based on her criticism of the filtering role that national committees have, for example, in selecting thematic proposals for the congresses, she pleaded for a democratic opening and reflection on how to make the CISH and its congresses more attractive.

In the lively discussion that followed, which the detailed report reflects very well, the need for change in CISH and its congresses was emphasised on the one hand, but on the other hand it became clear that CISH in its current constitution hardly has the means to carry out such a reform, but can at least initiate it and hope that it will be taken up by the local organising committees of the congresses.

One closes the book with the feeling of travelling back in time from the origins of the CISH to its present situation. Some problems have obviously existed for decades and have not irritated the participants of the congresses to such an extent that they would have stayed away. The fact that the CISH is a relatively slow organisation, selecting its main topics over several years in preparation for the next congress, also makes it immune to some short-lived fashions. Other problems, however, are now getting to the heart of the matter and obviously cannot be solved in the current mode. Digitisation, democratisation, a truly global representation of the various historical and historiographical cultures are on the agenda and one can vividly imagine how these problems, which were mentioned in Poznań in 2018, will come up again in 2022 at the same place.

The volume prepared by the organisers of the next congress is much more than a historical reassurance of the previous event. It is indeed a successful attempt to mobilise the history of the discipline for its future.
